

Clough Undergraduate Learning Commons

The five-story, 222,000-square-foot Clough Undergraduate Learning Commons (known as Clough or CULC) includes classrooms, labs, academic services and student commons areas. Named in honor of former Institute President G. Wayne Clough, it opened in 2011. The building serves as an interdisciplinary facility to encourage collaboration and technologically enhanced teaching and learning.

Clough Specific Initiatives

Our goal is to integrate programming into the interdisciplinary undergraduate curriculum to support Clough partners. This includes:

- Development of a program for first-year and transfer students centered around Clough as a hub for academic support and collaboration.
- Student-focused exhibits featuring Georgia Tech's legacy and the work of today's students.
- Creation of an environment inside of Clough that is the heart of the undergraduate experience at Georgia Tech.

Naming Opportunities and Expendable Funds

Support the growth of student programming and other initiatives through naming opportunities and expendable funds. Key areas of support include:

- Academic success programs for first-generation and limited-income students.
- Infusing arts in Clough by endowing the Clough Art Crawl and other exhibits.
- Endowed lecture series for undergraduates, such as the Last Lecture.
- Faculty fellowships and endowed chairs to support undergraduate teaching.
- Funds for student success awards, operational budgets for academic advisors, and modular furniture to transform study spaces.
- Establishing one-on-one meeting spaces with pod booths.
- Undergraduate and graduate student assistantships and peer tutor salary support.
- Celebrating student success through news articles, trophies, and a wall of awards with pictures.
- Archival art space initiative to display student artwork.
- Collaborating with partner units for naming rooms, centers, and departments (e.g. Nagle Comms Lab).

Clough Whole Person Development

With philanthropic support, this initiative will focus on supporting the holistic development of students by providing resources for therapeutic and stress-relieving activities. These activities will complement the academic support services already offered by Clough Partners.

Key elements include:

- Fun and therapeutic events targeted towards meeting students' academic needs.
- Engagement with the STAR program, Dean of Students office, and student government.
- Safe and supportive environment for stress relief and positive engagement.
